Flower Growing Is More than a Hobby

The beautiful art of Flower Growing plays an important part in the life of many people. Very often it takes away discontent, and brings satisfaction; takes away disappointment and brings many pleasant surprises; takes away sorrow and brings joy and cheerfulness. It brings more satisfaction than many miles of traveling or the reading of many books.

Flower Growing is not only a pastime for children or grandmothers, but is also real up-lifting recreation, for the man or woman who has monotonous dreary tasks to perform throughout the day.

Have You Failed in Growing Flowers?

If you have failed in the past, and continue using the same methods under the same conditions, successive failures are certain.

Do not act as the lady, who was working with an electric iron and burned out a fuse. She replaced it with a good fuse, which also burned out. She continued this, until her supply of half-dozen fuses were used. Now what would she do to make the iron heat? She went to the store and bought a new supply of two dozen fuses. The store keeper was surprised at the order, and asked her what she intended to do with so many fuses? She informed him that she had already burned out six, and her iron still would not heat, and that she intended to continue replacing the fuses until the iron would begin heating. "My good lady," said the store keeper, there is no defect in the fuses, but there must be something wrong with the iron."

You may laugh about this lady and her knowledge of electricity and fuses, but if we would analyze repeated failures in raising Flowers, we would find that faulty methods are frequently being used.

Weeds are the lazy man's crop, but good flowers are Hybrids, between patience and intelligence. If the Hybridizer would give-up, after raising his first generation of intermediate Hybrids, without working-out the products of independent Assortments, you would say, that he did not know his business, and would not be deserving of success. The flower lover acts in a similar manner if he abandons the art of raising flowers, on account of weeds, insects, or other difficulties.

What to do? First, insist on getting good seed, and strong healthy plants, or bulbs. Secondly, use scientific methods, and analyze your failures for all possible causes. Perhaps you will find insects working against you, or that the soil has been robbed of its plant food, by the roots of trees or large shrubbery, or that your plants have not been sufficiently watered. Whatever cause you find for failure, remove it at once, and your joyful success is assured.

Cultural Notes on GLADIOLUS

To have gorgeous flowers in Gladiolus, it is not enough to buy the choice varieties, but you must also grow them the better way. They grow in almost any type of soil, but must have plenty of sunshine. An occasional application of a complete commercial fertilizer, will help to bring those tall spikes of exhibition flowers.

Planting

Do not make the mistake of planting too far apart. All the space necessary for Glads is, that they get plenty of light and circulation of air. Plant in double rows with 2 inches of space between the bulbs. The rows should be 18 inches apart.

Cultivation

Cultivation begins soon after planting. It is a good practice to remove the first weeds before the gladiolus are up. Weekly cultivation will do much to preserve the moisture needed for the development of the plants, especially if a water supply is not on hand. Cultivation should be very shallow late in the season when the Glads begin to bloom.

Watering

A generous supply of water will help to produce excellent spikes. More water is needed if Glads are planted close together or in perennial borders, where they are pressed by other plants with a more extensive root system. Too frequent watering should be avoided, a thorough soaking from time to time is much better. An overhead sprinkler turned on over night is ideal.

Blooming

This is the time to enjoy the reward of patient labor. For home decoration the spikes should be cut when the first flower opens. Usually the color keeps much better than if allowed to open inside. If many flowers are wanted for a special occasion, they can be stored away at a temperature of 35-40 degrees, where they keep in good condition a week or two. This keeping quality is especially welcome for the flower show.

THRIPS

If you have succeeded in controlling Thrips, your greatest difficulty in growing Gladiolus successfully, has been overcome. Thrips is a very small insect, which sucks the sap from the plant, and causes it to wither and dry-up. Usually, just before the buds begin to open. They multiply very rapidly and soon destroy the entire plant. We have seen many plantings where people did not get a single good flower on account of Thrips. Some were so disappointed that they said, "No Glads for me anymore." Others have used the proper methods of controlling Thrips, and have raised perfect flowers. One party informed us, that in 1934, he lost all his Gladiolus on account of Thrips. Last season he followed instructions as given below, for treating Gladiolus for Thrips, and the result was that not a flower was lost, all were gorgeous.

Treatment for Thrips

Disinfect bulbs in a solution of bi-chloride of mercury, 1 oz. to 6 gal. of water. Keep bulbs in solution, at least 7 hours; use wooden container for the solution, because bi-chloride of mercury corrodes metal containers. The solution is dangerously poisonous and should be handled with caution.

This treatment will not only kill Thrips, but is also the best remedy against scab and other diseases of Glads. If you have only a small quantity of bulbs, remove the husks before treatment.

All our bulbs are treated against Thrips and diseases before being shipped out. This however, does not mean that your bulbs cannot become infested. Thrips can spread in many ways. They can be carried far distances by the wind, and after once in the garden, they increase very rapidly, especially in dry weather. Spray against such infestation, beginning as soon as the plants are a few inches high. Use the following solution: 2 tablespoons of Paris Green, 2 lbs. of brown sugar, and 3 gals. of water. Spray thoroughly once a week.

Sizes of Bulbs

Our bulbs are carefully graded with a standard bulb grader. We offer them in three sizes, Large, 1¼ in. and up; Medium, ¾ to 1¼ in.; Small, ½ to ¾ in.
